Twin-engine Beechcraft slams into a Japanese home

MANILA, May 18. (AP): A twin-engine commuter plane with 21 people aboard crashed after takeoff this morning and exploded after hitting a house south of Manila's airport. Witnesses said there was no sign of survivors.

The witnesses said a Japanese man, his Filipino wife and two children were in the house, which burst into flames. Employees of the home in suburban Paranaque said the four residents were asleep in their bedroom and were feared

MANILA, May 18, (Reuter): The United States bluntly warned today it could pull out of its military facilities in the Philippines unless Manila based its alliance with Washington

In tough negotiations, the two sides failed to settle the future of American military bases in the Philippines. However, they solved a conflict over compensation and agreed to hold further talks on the future of their entire political and security relationship.

Philippine Airlines Boeing 737 with 119 people aboard exploded and caught fire while waiting to take off from the domestic airport on a flight to the central Philippine city of Iloilo.

Eight people were killed but the cause of the incident has not been determined. The Beechcrast propeller-driven aircraft, owned by the Aerolift Corp., took off about 6:25 am today (2225 GMT Thursday) for the Mindanao island town of Surigao when air controllers saw it was

Boat people confab

Deadlocked

MANILA, May 18, (Reuter): An international conference on Indo-Chinese boat people was deadlocked over the issue of forcible repatriation to Vietnam, the chairman of the meeting said today.

Sergio Vieira de Mello, regional head for Asia and Oceania of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, told reporters at the end of the 28nation meeting that failure to solve the issue threatened the programme of granting temporary asylum to boat people in Southeast Asia.

"The longer-term viability of the plan of action depended on the resolution of the problem of those determined (by a screening process) not to be (political) refugees," he said in a summary of the results of the two-day conference.

The screening process is designed to separate genuine political refugees from people seeking more prosperous lives.

The United States and Vietnam oppose forcible repatriation of boat people, but Hong Kong and Southeast Asian nations warned yesterday they would close their doors to new arrivals unless fresh steps were taken to solve an "intolerable" problem.

"Several participants expressed the view a further meeting of the "Several participants expressed the view a further meeting of the steering committee would only serve a meaningful purpose if progress could be achieved on the outstanding issues," said De Mello.

Allan Jury, the head of the American delegation at the conference, said in an interview that the United States remained opposed to the "involuntary return" people who had fled Vietnam, but he would "convey the beliefs of Southeast Asian states" to Washington.

De Mello admitted he felt the asylum process was in danger of total breakdown, but claimed the meeting was "extremely useful" in taking up issues "where we have lacked agreement so far."

150,000 Managua workers end strike

MANAGUA, May 18, (AP): An estimated 150,000 government employees ended a week-long strike that had threatened the new administration, but university students began a protest rally outside Parliament.

The huge walkouts were a vic-tory for the leftist Sandinista National Liberation Front, which engineered the strikes beginning Friday to press for job security and big pay increases.

The 3-week-old government of President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro promised not to fire those who walked off their jobs and agreed to double salaries for the public employees as part of the strike settlement.

That was about half what the Sandinista-dominated unions originally asked but higher than the 60 per cent Chamorro initially offered.

She has devalued the cordoba. Nicaragua's currency, four times since she took office on April 25; inflation however is averaging 70 per cent monthly, in effect steadily reducing the real wages of workers in this nation of 3.5 million residents.

"Everything is returning to normal. Employees at the bank-ing system cleared out the offices they had occupied and those at the ministries are following suit," presidential spokesman Danilo Lacayo said in a telephone

The international airport reopened and the bus system was getting back into gear.

In Washington, President George Bush complained that a procedural deadlock in the US Congress was holding up a $300-million aid package for Nicaragua and that he could not disburse $4 million in emergency help requested by Chamorro until the package is approved. Alejandro Solorizano, a labour leader who supports Chamorro, said the strike more resembled an attempt by the Sandinistas to bring down the new government than a job action.

"The strike was managed directly by a few leaders of the Sandinista Front. It was an attempted coup, carried out by adventurers and holdup men who checkmated the government," Solorzano said.

Uruguay a car buff's heaven

Britons worried

'Mad cow' disease

LONDON, May 18, (Reuter): The death of a pet cat from a disease which kills cattle is worrying Britons that it could spread to them.

The government announced last week that Max, a five-year-old Siamese, had contracted a form of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) — or mad cow disease — which has hit more than 13,000 cattle in Britain since 1986.

The disclosure stoked up a row between the government and experts worried that if the disease can be passed from grass-eating animals to meateaters such as cats it might also spread to humans. The beef scare has provided more unappetising news about food for Britons who may have already lost their taste for eggs said to be tainted with salmonella, cheese brimming with listeria germs and frozen food full of bacteria.

Britons are also buying more bottled water than ever after nitrates and sewage were found in drinking water in some areas.

Veterinary surgeons carrying out a post-mortem on the cat, which was thought to have been infected through pet food, found the sponge-like holes characteristic of BSE in its brain.

BSE is a fatal brain disease of cattle which can be incubated for five years or more. Visible symptoms, which include aggressive behaviour and unsteadiness of gait—hence 'mad cow' disease—occur only in the terminal stages. There is no cure.

Ministers and farmers' leaders have dismissed fears that BSE can be passed to humans but panic among shoppers and importers of British beef could be catastrophic for the country's two billion-poundsterling ($3.5 billion) cattle industry.

The row has fuelled public concern and captured headlines in Britain's national newspapers and television news programmes. An all-party commit-

European Court rules

Pension fund equality must

BRUSSELS, May 18, (Reuter): The European Court of Justice, in a jud-gement with dramatic implications for company pension schemes in the European Economic Community, ruled on Thursday that they must grant the same terms to men and

The ruling means that companies which have funded their pension schemes on the assumption that men will be entitled to pensions later than women now face a big bill to guaran-tee all employees the same pension

The financial implications of the judgement are potentially so serious that the Luxembourg-based court made a rare exception from normal practice and ruled that its provisions would not apply retroactively.

Protests mark Kwangju revolt

Thousands pay homage

KWANGJU, May 18, (AP): The 10th anniversary of the bloodiest rebellion in modern South Korean history was remembered with flowers and street violence today.

The national daily Dong-A Ilbo said about 50,000 students joined in today's protests on more than 150 campuses throughout the country.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or arrests, other reports said.

In Kwangju, the scene of the May 18, 1980, revolt, combat-clad riot police fired volleys of tear gas to break up about 1,000 students trying to enter a school for a rally outlawed by the government.

Then years ago in Kwangju, hundreds of thousands of citizens rose up against the central government to protest a crackdown on political dissent. The protesters drove out police and took control of the city for 10 days before being crushed by tank-led paratroopers.

'Too much freedom'

Kim speaks out

SEOUL, May 18, (UPI): To a woman brought up under a rigid communist ideology in North Korea, anti-government protests in South Korea appear to be a luxury she can hardly understand.

The observation comes from Kim Hyon-hui, 28, a confessed North Korean agent who placed a time bomb on a Korean Air jetliner late in 1987. She was sentended to death but has since been pardoned because of her potential as a witness to North Korean authorities.

Kim made her first public appearance when she attended a church service Wednesday, news reports said. She also had a session with "At first I was puzzled to see demonstrations taking place in this country where people live in affluence," Kim told reporters after attending a service at a Baptist church in Seoul, the reports said.

"There are no such demonstrations in North Korea, where what (President) Kim Il-sung says is law. There seems to be too much of freedom in South Korea. I even wonder why such political confusion should be allowed." She said after nearly three years in the South she came to realise that in a capitalist society freedom is guaranteed and its citizens are encouraged to demonstrate their capabilities, whereas North Korea is a rigid class society where private initiatives are denied

She said she became a Christian after meeting a minister about a year ago. She said she reads the Bible every day and currently is writing an autobiography telling how she was born, educated, drafted as a terrorist agent and carried out the KAL bombing.

China has no regrets: Jiang

NEW YORK, May 18, (Agencies): Chinese Communist Party leader Jiang Zemin, in what was described as his first television interview since coming to power, called the crackdown on demonstrators in Tianamen Square "much ado about nothing" and said 431 people, including 42
students, were still in prison.
In a taped interview with Barbara Walters of ABC's "20/20" programme, Jiang also spelled out conditions under which dissident Fang Lizhi could leave the US embassy in Beijing, where he has been living since the crackdown, and said ousted Communist Party leader Zhao Ziyang, who sym-pathised with the students, would not be brought to trial.

Walters asked Jiang, who is also chairman of the Central Military Commission, if he had a Chinese proverb to describe the Tiananmen crackdown. "To give a Chinese proverb, I would say that it's like 'much ado about nothing'," he said.

It was Jiang's first television interview since coming to power after the crackdown last June. Jiang said: "I don't have any regrets about the way in which we dealt with the events which took place last year in Beijing. Had we failed, in the end, to take resolute measures to deal with those the People's Republic of China would have been thrown into great

But he said he did not think a violent crackdown on similar prodemocracy demonstrations would take place again.

"We have a proverb in China, 'a fall into the pit, a gain in your wit," he said. "I think we learn by our mistakes; that is, we have made adequate preparations in terms of strengthening the police force and storing non-lethal reapons. In this regard, I am ready to learn from all the developed Western countries."

China accused the United States yesterday of smearing the Chinese government over its human rights record and denied Amnesty International charges of widespread human rights viola-

Foreign Ministry spokesman Li Jinhua, speaking at a weekly briefing, also said recent student demonstrations in Bulgaria, the Soviet Union and Hong Kong in support of pro-democracy students in China were inappropriate and based on ignorance.

Li expressed China's "strong protest" over a proclamation sig-ned by US President George Bush Saturday designating May 13 a national day in support of him Chinese President Yang Shangkun was quoted yesterday as saying last year's bloody crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrators in Beijing represented a triumph for socialism.

"It didn't hart Chinese socialism," Yang said in remarks to the Mexican news agency Notimex when asked about the military crackdown in and around Tiananmen Square.

"It strengthened the government's faith in the socialist system and allowed us to dismantle the seditious plots."

NAGASAKI, May 18, (AP): When the Emperor of Japan leaves his palace in Tokyo, nothing is left to chance.

Determined to eliminate the element of surprise, officials in this scenic coastal city on the southern island of K yushu have slaved for months over preparations for the arrival of Emperor Akinito and Empress Michiko. Officials here are particularly nervous because the Emperor is to meet Mayor Itoshi Motoshima, who was shot in the back by a rightist in January for saying the late Emperor Hirohito, Akihito's father, bore some war responsibility.

Though the city was quiet on the eve of the visit, about 4,000 police officers were being mobilised to ensure the monarch's safety. Highlighting the Emperor's four-day stay will be a visit to an atomic bomb memorial at Peace Park soon after his arrival today and the 41st annual Arbor Day Festival on Sun-

The Emperor, who is to plant a tree and give a short address, is to stay at the festival for less than one hour, but officials reportedly are spending 7 million yen ($50,000) to deadorise sight, and have told media hoping to cover the event by helicopter not to create any ruckus

Torture routine in Cars set Burmese prisons on fire in

Jailed British physicist says

BANGKOK, May 18, (AP): A Briton detained for three months in Burma said yesterday that he saw evidence that torture, including electric shocks and beatings, was routinely used on prisoners he met there.

Paul Key, a 45-year-old physicist from London, was arrested after entering western Burma from Bangladesh on Feb 8. He was found guilty of entering the country without a visa and violating foreign exchange regulations.

Key, who was held in the towns of Maungdaw and Sittwe, was deported from Burma to Thailand on May 4. Although he was well-treated while held in Burma, Key said he witnessed daily beatings of other prisoners and saw evidence of At a detention centre in Maun-

"All the prisoners considered torture so routine that they found it amusing when I told them that it was not normal elsewhere in the world," Key told the Associated Press in an interview in Bangkok.

"It was taken for granted that they wire you up when you walk through the door," he said. The London-based human rights group, Amnesty Inter-national, said in a May 2 report that torture of civilians in Burma was widespread and anyone suspected of opposing the government was at risk. Key said the treatment of prisoners who were members of insurgent groups was the most often maltreated by Burmese prison trustics and guards.

One of three Muslim Arakanese insurgents, a farmer in his 30s, said they had received electric shocks to their backs, head and genitals, and been beaten on their shin bones by guards, Key said. One sull bore scars on one leg from such a beating, he said.

TOKYO, May 18, (UPI): Six cars parked at six different locations linked to the Justice Ministry erupted in flames at about the same time yesterday, and police said they suspect a leftist group opposed to next week's visit by South Korean President Roh Tac Woo.

Tree in Calcutta catches fire and becomes a shrine CALCUTTA, May 18, (Reuter): A 50-yearold tree standing in a Calcutta municipal park burst into flames a few months ago and is now famous as a Hindu shrine, For believers, it has become the abode of Hindu god Shiva the destroyer who wears a cobra snake as a necklace.

The tree's transformation to divine repository was sudden. Doe urges Liberians to fight

(Reuter): President Samuel Doe made a desperate appeal today to all Liberians, even old men, to use any weapons they could find to fight rebels poised to topple

He also vowed to fight rebel leader Charles Taylor if he carried out his threat to attack the capital Monrovia.

"If you are a loyal citizen then go out and defend your country," he told a meeting of tribal and political chiefs. Doe, wearing his general's uniform and speaking without a text, called on retired soldiers to re-enlist, and on old men and women and students to take up arms.

"If the rebels will not surrender I will make them surrender,"

Doe has frequently vowed to crush the rebels since they invaded Liberia's northeast Nimba county last December.

From just 150 men armed with everything from bazookas to bows and arrows the rebels have grown to a 5.000-strong force.

Doe has recruited 3,000 youngsters into his 5.800-man army since March but they have folded before a two-prong rebel onslaught west and south of Nimba.

The guerrillas are now within a few km (miles) of Liberia's second city Gbanga.

Independent candidate found dead

By Thomas Abraham Arab Times correspondent

NEW DELHI, May 18: By-election to the Meham assembly seat, from where Haryana Chief Minister Om Prakash Chautala is seeking election, was countermanded for the second time yesterday after the murder of an independent candidate.

Reports reaching here said the bullet-riddled body of the candidate, Amir Singh, was found abandoned in an adjoining district yesterday morning. Soon after, the election commission announced its decision to countermand the polls, as provided under the rules.

The by-election was countermanded earlier after large-scale violence and rigging when polling was first held in February, with Chautala accused of having engineered booth capturing and intimidated voters with the help of the law and order

Chautala is the eldest son of Deputy Prime Minister Devi Lal and was the Janata Dal's official candidate for the by-election. His main rival is Anand Singh Dangi, a party rebel, who has been named in the first information report about yesterday's murder. Chautala succeeded Devi Lal as Haryana chief minister when the latter was appointed deputy prime minister. He has to get elected to the legislative assembly before June 2 to continue as chief minister or step down. Chautala is contesting from two constituencies this time, the second being Dariba Kalan, which is now his only hope. Like Meham, polling at Dariba Kalan is also scheduled for May 26.

Amir Singh was among the 29 candidates in the fray for the Meham seat. With the countermanding of the by-election, the entire poll process has to be gone through all over again.

Police fired on a mob that thwarted the arrest of a state legislature candidate sought in the murder of a rival candidate, killing at least three people, news reports said today.

United News of India said the Yugoslavia. Belgrade zoo claimed them, saying it had ordered them from a trouble started after police arrived in Medina to arrest Anand Singh Dangi for the killing of Amir Singh. No new repoll date has been

NEW DELHI, May 18: Inland air travel will be slightly costlier in India now, with Finance Minister Madhu Dandavate hiking the tax on the total fare from ten to fifteen per cent. Dandavate announced the increase while moving the finance bill in the Lok Sabha Wednesday. In his A.G. Kulkarni of the opposition budget proposals for 1990-91, he had imposed an inland air travel tax at ten per cent on the full fare instead of the basic fare as was in force till then. The modification announced now is to narrow down the gap between the US dollar fare and the Indian rupee fare.

Simultaneously, Dandavate announced many other minor modifications in his budget proposals, offering some concess in direct and indirect taxes. Through his original proposals, he had planned to mop up Rs 1.959 crores of additional revenue. The net revenue loss involved in the changes made now are expected to be relatively small and would be made good by better tax collection, he said. The finance bill, which gives effect to the budget proposals, was passed ing to the debate on the bill, Daniavate rejected the de ing the income tax exemption limit beyond Rs22,000. The increase in the prices of petrol and diesel was an unpleasant decision forced on the government by the severe economic function, he said. Among the concessions announced by Dandavate was a five percentage point reduction at all levels of tax for co-operative societies.

He has also liberalised the deduction in regard to expenses incurred on handicapped children, raising the qualifying income limit of parents or guardians from Rs 60,000 to Rs 100,000.

There has been some uncertainty in regard to the number of days that a person employed as a member of the crew of an Indian ship can spend in India in a particular previous year without being considered a resident in India for that year under the income tax act. Dandavate put the matter beyond doubt by clarifying that such crew members would lose their non-resident status only if they are in India for more than 182 days in sions. Dandavate has provided for duty free high speed diesel to small fishermen usingmechanised vessels. In the budget, Dandavate had imposed differential rates of excise duty on purified terephthalic acid (PTA) and dimethyl terephthalate (DMT), which are used in the manufacture of polyester staple fibre and yarn. Now, both will attract a uniform rate of 15 per cent. Other sectors and items benefitting from the concessions included the tea industry, mini-cement plants, synthetic woven sacks, metal con-tainers and textile processing machinery. Excise duty on both blank and recorded audio cassettes has been removed but there is a marginal increase in the duty on the magnetic tape used in the manufacture of same to them. The assault on a high school teacher who was beaten for lecturing against racism and anti-Semitism epitomised contemporary right-wing xenophobia in France.

It equales French Jews with North African Arab immigrants as alien parasites... But its attacks on the latter are far more overt because the racists sense that whereas very few French would admit to a prejudice against Jews, many present the Arabs, race relations experts say.

The teacher, Christiane Guiard of Emile Zola College in Royan, near Bordeaux, is neither Arab nor Jew.

She was attacked on Monday for instructing pupils that, in France, racism is not an opinion but a crime.

She was pointing out that racism often goes hand-in-hand with anti-Semitism, that it can lead to outrages such as the May 10 desecration of the Jewish cemetery in the southern town of Carpentras, in which a body was dug

This narrow focus in turn prompted race relations experts and leading politicians to point out that the Carpentrus attack should not obscure the fact that Arabs and Africans are the main victims of French xenophobia.

Racism and anti-Semitism were inextricably linked, they said. Unless they were com-batted as a single evil and not with selective outrage, the problem would grow.

"If they had demonstrated in such numbers against the attacks on (Arab) immigrants there would perhaps not have been this rise in overt anti-Semitism," said Malik Boutih.

Mitterrand warned against race hatred after attacks on North African youths in mid-March left one dead, another in an irreversible coma and a third paralysed.

"Anti-Arab racism goes much deeper here than anti-Semitism. There is only a minority against it, whereas anti-Semitism is generally condemned," said historian Madeleine

But both said the two currents were part of the same rising tide of xenophobia, fuelled by the extreme-right national front.

A crisis that President Borisav Jovic says could end in civil war deepened when the two noncommunist republics dismissed a warning by the collective state presidency that it would take argent steps to hold the country together.

"We reject the unconstitutional and contradictory statement which defines the constitutionally guaranteed sovereignty of the republics of Slovenia and Croatia," Croatian and Slovene leaders said in a joint statement late yesterday. Croatia and Slovenia, wealthy and relatively Westernised regions in northern Yugoslavia voted out the communists in the first free elections in Yugoslavia since World War Two.

Their victorious right of centre parties want independence from the federal authorities in Belgrade and threaten to secede from Yugoslavia if their demands are not met. Their joint declaration of defiance, issued after talks near the Slovene-Croatian border, raised tension and widened the split between the non-communist north and communist-ruled south.

Western diplomats said the confrontation could spell the end of Yugoslavia. "This could end up in complete strife." Slovenia and Croatia say Serbia, the biggest republic, wants control over the rest of the country. They say Jovic, a Serb who became president on Tuesday by annual rotation, wants to block democratic reforms in their republics.

Baker reports progress

MOSCOW, May 18, (AP): US Secretary of State James Baker reported progress today after talks with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, but said the superpowers still hadn't forged an agreement on reducing their arsenals of long-range nuclear weapons. After meeting with Gorba-chev. Baker took time out from the arms-control talks to meet with Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene, who was in Moscow trying to persuade the Soviet president to open negotia-tions on her republic's bid for independence. Baker then returned to the bargaining table with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze. The US and Soviet negotiators are trying to reach an agreement on reducing the superpowers arsenals of long-range missiles, bombers and submarines in time for Gorbachev's summit with US President George Bush in Washington from May 31-June

"We made some progress," Baker said after his talks with Gorbachev. "We still have a number of issues that are still out

Asked if agreement on key issues would be ready for the summit. Baker replied. "We keep hoping we can accomplish that."

Earlier today in the Kremlin, Gorbachev said the Soviets were doing their best to stitch together an agreement. The Bush administration had accused the Soviets of backtracking on their earlier positions before Baker arrived in Moscow on Tuesday.

The Soviet leader said he did not know if an agreement would be ready in time for the Washington summit, but told reporters, "I think we are moving closer."

Mixed signals also came from the US side, where officials spoke both of continuing gaps and of hopes for an accord. Without a compromise on air and sea-launched cruise missiles and other disputed weapons, the summit will lack the dramatic centrepiece Hinders reforms

Fear of change

MOSCOW, May 18, (AP): Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said yesterday that the public's fear of change is holding back his efforts to restructure the Soviet Union's economic and political systems.

"In politics, the public doesn't accept pluralism, and it has complexes about ideological conceptions and cliches," he told reporters at a parliamentary session in Moscow. "Take any sphere, everywhere we are hindered by complexes," the Soviet leader said. "People are saying, 'chaos, chaos, collapse, collapse'. When Lenin watched a similar revolutionary process, he said, 'You know, this chaos will crystallize a new form of life.' Some of Gorbachev's economic advisers in the past have said the public's fear of higher prices and unemployment could hinder the Soviet President's programme of restructuring, known as perestroika.

But Gorbachev himself had not previously spoken about the problem in such an open manner. "Perestroika depends on public opinion, and it's Conservative," he told the reporters who crowded around him during a break in the Russian republic's Congress, which is meeting in Moscow.

Grobachev has delayed an economic reform plan over the last two months. Aides have backed away from suggestions that Polish-style shock therapy" was in store for the Soviet economy.

Polish leaders made quick, dramatic changes in Poland's subsidized economy in hopes of shortening the transition from communism to a market economy, but the reforms brought sudden price increases and greater unemployment.

Gorbachev has promised that nothing will be decided without discussion. He also indicated the reform programme will not be discussed with his advisory presidential council until May 22. The Soviet leader spoke with reporters in the Kremlin's ornate St

George's Hall during a break at the Congress of the Russian Federa-tion, where reformers forced his candidate for president into giving an accounting of his performance as premier. Radicals have predicted that such an accounting would be embarrassing, given the country's economic crisis. They also predicted they could persuade Gorbachev to withdraw his candidate, Russian Premier Alexander V. Vlasov, from the race against political maverick Boris N. Yeltsin and substitute a more centrist candidate. Otherwise, Gorbachev risks allowing Russia to be led by Yeltsin, the silver-haired Siberian populist who is his most popular critic.

By meeting with the Lithuanian prime minister, Baker gave at least symbolic US support to the Baltic republic's independence

"We are still very hopeful, as we have been for some time, that Soviets would negotiate terms for independence with Lithuania.

Talksto resolve Baltics dispute

MOSCOW, May 18, (AP): President Mikhail Gorbachev said today the Kremlin was prepared to examine any possibility to resolve the dispute over Lithuanian independence provided the Soviet constitutional process is observed.

The prime minister of the breakaway republic, Kazimiera Primskiene, met with Gorbachev yesterday and said afterward that significant progress was made toward a settlement. But neither side suggested that the dispute that followed the republic's March 11 declaration of indepen dence had been settled.
Today Mrs Prunskiene met with US Secretary of State James Baker, who has said the Baltic impasse was casting a shadow over the summit between Gorba-chev and US President George Bush scheduled for later this Baker arrived at Spaso House, the bome of US Ambassador Jack Matlock, an hour and 45 minutes late, indicating that his earlier meeting with Gorbachev had gone into overtime.

In a sign of continuing tension Lithuanian radio reported that Soviet soldiers shot to death a Lithuanian teenager who was trying to enter a military unit on Tuesday. In a broadcast mon-itored by the BBC, the report said two passerby also were wounded by automatic weapons fire. No other details were reported.

Military officials have complained of several rock-throwing or suiper attacks on Soviet soldiers in military installations. There had been no serious injuries reported in those incidents.

Moscow has used the military to make repeated shows of force in the breakaway republic.

Gorbachev, speaking to repor-ters before meeting with Baker this morning, said: "Through the constitutional process, we are ready to consider any possibility.

Before her meeting with Baker, Mrs Prunskiene visited the Moscow embassies of countries she recently toured, including Scandanavia, Britain, and the United States. She delivered letters express gratitude for the support she received, an official at the Lithuanian mission in Moscow said: Mrs Prunskiene, speaking with reporters at the Lithnanian mission in Moscow after her meeting with Gorbachev yesterday, said the republic's Parliament will be called into session on Saturday to formalise the offer to suspend laws passed to implement the republic's declaration of independence. The compromise proposal "does not mean we are returnin to the situation of March 10, Mrs Primskiene told reporters, emphasising Lithuanian deter-mination not to back away from eventual independence.

Mrs Prunskiene was called to the Kremlin late yesterday for a one-hour and 40 minute meeting with Gorbachev and Soviet Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov.

"We moved forward very significantly," she told reporters later. She also quoted Gorbachev as noting progress.

Waste burial costs municipality KD 3 per ton

CIVILISED communities show increasing concern about the disposal of household wastes, due to the close relation of this issue with the environment and public health. Some communities have even gone so far as to utilise these wastes after them to address the twin issues of economics and environment. Kuwait Municipality has been attentively following up the technologies employed in utilising municipal wastes and studies have been conducted to determine the potentials of this project in the country particularly solid wastes. Recent studies have shown that the currently used methods to dispose of solid municipal wastes and related economic feasibility is closely related to the populations mix and the urban growth in the KD2,700,000 which translates to KD3 per ton.

Studies have indicated that the average of daily wastes in the late 70's Kuwait per capita is 1.21 kg and that the eighties showed a slight rise in the individual's size of discarded wastes up to 1.5 kg daily.

The current size solid wastes picked up by municipality staff around Kuwait is estimated at 2,700 tons daily, and this figure is steadilty increasing with the growth in population and urban development. The studies also revelaed that the total amount of wastes buried by the International schools — KES one among many—she saw as agencies for developing greater harmony among people, uniting minds and spirits in tomorrow's world. Her hope was that the generation now in school would keep alive the dream of making the world a better place; would themselves pass on to others the enrichment they had received through education. Reflecting upon his eight years at KES, head boy Mahyar Azaraksh, spoke appreciately of his debt to the school, where he found his abilities, both physical and mental, were stretched farther than he had expected. He had learnt how to socialise with. and to understand, people of dif-ferent cultures. To his parents, he paid moving tribute for their guidance. "For my part," he added, "I think they made the

Study on effect of maids under way

Language problems effect on children language

Dr Shatti who was speaking at DR ADNAN Al Shatti of the psychology department of Kuwait University has said that ministries of Education, Planning and Social Affairs and Labour undertook three studies in 1983 and 1985 on the effects of maids on the language of children they take care of. But he added that none of these studies was scientific or gave correct results.

These studies showed that there are no negative effects on the language of children. He added that information of the three studies were taken from parents of children who usually denied that their maids affected the language of their children.

lecture organised by the Faculty of Arts said he has been making a study on the same subject since 1987. He added that his study proved that previous studies were untrue and not undertaken on a scientific base because of false information provided by families that were involved in these studies. He added that he is making his study on about 100 children at kindergartens. Half of them are being taken care of by their mothers and the other half are being taken care of by maids. These children are about 4 years old which is the critical stage of gaining and lear-

The children looked after by maids used an average of 160 words to comment on these pictures while children taken care of by their mothers used an average of 210 words to comment on same pictures, Dr Shatti said." He added that other tests included the number of repeated words and the use of non-Arabic words in speaking. Dr Shatti pointed out that it is beneficial for children when their maids teach them English but this should be limited for a few hours daily and only under con-trol of their parents. He added that results of his study are expected to appear at the end of this

Privatisation policies should be evaluated: economist

Contribution to GNP retreats

TRANSFERRING the present functions of several public sector undertakings to the sole responsibility of the private sector should be carefully evaluated on a broad-banded basis, a Kuwaiti academic economist said.

Dr Modhi Al Humoud, a professor at the faculty of commerce and economy of Kuwait University in a research paper undertaken on Kuwait's experiment on privatisation of the public sector expressed doubts on the capability of this sector to shoulder these responsibilities independently.

The official recommended developing an appropriate formula which will ensure that the private sector is professionally in tune with the ramifications involved in efficiently managing utilities of the public sector.

Research

In her research submitted at a seminar held recently in Cairo on this issue in the Arab countries, she explained in Cairo on this issue in the Arab countries, she explained that the de-nationalisation process in Arab countries had been implemented through three avenues; the first dealt with the privatisation of the public sector either partially or totally, the second involved reducing the monopolist role of the public sector by introducing the simultaneous involvement of the private sector and the third focused on allowing the private sector to manage some of the activities presently being looked after exclusively by the public sector. She commented that the public sector in Kuwait intends to opt to practice the second and third avenues as its dependence on the private sector had witnessed significant increase in recent years. However, she said that the private sector which remains as a main pillar of the Kuwaiti economy had seen its influence erode in the wake of the economic boom that was evidenced by the country during the oil era. Since then, the role of the private sector had closely been connected with governmental expenditures and accordingly had been transferred from an initiating sector to one receiving patronage.

Humoud disclosed that most private sector units mainly comprise individual enterprises and limited liability firms which constitute about 90 per cent of the private sector. Thus, taking the large level of commitment, she said that we should carefully weigh the various issues of the denationalisation process of the public sector. Worldorce

Speaking of the workforce in the private sector, Humoud said that this sector mainly employs expatriate workforce, particularly during the past few years due to the rationalisation of expenditure adopted by the

The strength of the expatriate workforce is estimated to be about 94.7 per cent of the manpower in the private sector with about 53 per cent foreigners, while Arabs are 41 per cent, according to statistics undertaken in 1985, compared to 89.9 per cent in 1980.

Speaking of the contributions of the private sector to the Gross National Product (GNP), Humod said that they had significantly retreated during recent years — from 34.5 per cent in 1982 to about 23.7 per cent in

Meanwhile, the official said that Kuwait extends the necessary subsidy to different industrial, agricultural and commercial activities undertaken by the private sector. These subsidies are represented in various forms, including concessional industrial loans and providing lands at symbolic prices, including exemption from customs duties on equipments imported for industrial purposes in addition to subsidies on gas and electricity.

Subsidies

Specifically, she said that governmental subsidy to the agricultural sector amounted to about KD12.477 million during the period 1983-1987, with 49 per cent being allocated to the support of vegetables agricultural projects, the balance being devoted to the building of greenhouses and wells. Further, she added that governmental productive projects receive a lot of subsidy in view of their high capital costs and the private sector right from the early stages had refrained from being involved in such projects. In relation to privatisation of these projects, she commented that government subsidy will not be discontinued and in this context the issue of privatisation should be carefully considered. Commenting on a statement that the privatisation process is being developed to enhance the productivity of the public sector, the official said that relevant statistics had confirmed that the private sector in Kuwait is not bereft of its particular form of administrative problems. She disclosed that about 77.5 per cent of the private sector corporations do not abide by either annual or semi-annual commissioning schemes and that 44 per cent of these corporations give no incentives to their workers. The balance had no specific criterias to evalaute work perfor-

Concluding, Humoud said that the privatisation process does not constitute the sole solution to the problems of the public sector, but solutions rest in adopting an ambitious programme for reforming public enterprises and other governmental units.

Rail help

VIENNA, May 18, (Kuna): Director-general of Tunisia's National Railways Company Al Nouri Shawish has highly appreciated Kuwait's contribution to rehabilitate the country's railroads network.

In an interview with Kuna, the Tunisian official said the World Bank in collaboration with the Kuwait-based Arab Development Fund will finance the stretching of a 70-km long railroad to link two cities in South Tunisia.

Shawish, currently here for an international conference on the promotion of rail transport in North African countries, told Kuna that the KD2.8 million project comes in the framework of an overall project aimed at linking the Arab Maghreb states with a railways network.

He said that the kingdom of Saudi Arabia is also contributing to the project. He did not specify the kingdom's share.

Environment issues under consideration

Power seminar

EXPERTS participating in the second seminar on Power System in the GCC states continued discussi Henry C. Mangam, a senior environment specialist of Electricity Supply Board - Ireland, spoke about giving due consideration to the environment in the planning of the generation of electricity.

Environmental considerations are becoming ever more important in the development of electricity industry due to the emergence of many problems of a global nature, Mangam said and added that the development of responses are taking place at an ever increasing pace.

He commented that it would be useful for electricity utilities to carry out in-depth multi-disciplinary studies of the implications of these problems and determine solutions.

He said that such studies are of use for the utilities own strategy and also to assist the appropriate national authorities in the development of national responses that are well-founded on both environmental and socio-economic criteria.

A. Habib from Bahrain spoke about the load management scheme in Bahrain, past experience and future prospects. He said that the poor annual load factor is a common problem in many large power systems.

This is mainly attributed to minute to minute variation in load demand with rapid increase during certain periods of the day.

He added that the experience with the pilot load management programme proved the feasibility of introducing such techniques. Future schemes should achieve at least 10 per cent of system load giving a cyclic reduction load of 2.5 per cent. The cyclic off period could be evaluated by understanding the nature and extent of temperature changes in the premises of consumers.

He concluded that load management schemes constitute an important change in consumers daily habits and should be introduced on a voluntary basis. To make them attractive for consumers tariff incentives should be provided, he said.

Yemenis in UAE celebrate merger

ABU DHABI, May 18, (Reuter): Thousands of Yemenis living in the United Arab Emirates (UAE) danced today to celebrate the imminent merger of North and South Yemen.

People from both states embraced and shouted "Long live

Yemen" as loudspeakers blared the national anthem of the new country. Some sported traditional weapons. "The celebrations will continue until unification is proclaimed later this month," North Yemeni Ambassador Mohammed Hetem Al Khawi told Reuters during the festivities near his embassy in Abu Dhabi.

Some South Yemenis said the end of socialist rule in their country made them even happier than the merger. "The most important thing is that people no longer live in fear. Shortages of consumer goods are ending," one said.

South Yemen, announcing liberalisation plans after years of authoritarian rule, and its conservative northern neighbour decided last November to unite.

Two new hippopotami at Omariya zoo

THE director of Omariya Zoo at the Public Authority for Agriculture and Fish Resources Musa Al Khashti has said that the zoo has bought a youple of hippopotami recently. This kind of animal that lives in Africa is being brought to Kuwait and Gulf states for the first time. He dded that a number of different animals were also brought to the zoo to be shown to visitors. He added mat these new animals are the local volf, European wolves, black gazelle, porcupine, bears, gray squirrel, American lions and wild cats.

Khashti pointed out that there are 56 kinds of mammals forming a total of 228 animals, 91 kinds of birds forming a total of 492 birds and pine kinds of reptiles forming 39 reptile animals in the Omariya zoo. The zoo is a place that allows visitors to see all world creatures in a limited place.

Research

The 200 has became an entertainment place for children. He added that administration of the zoo is co-operating with faculty of medicine and Kuwait Foundation for Advancement of Science in researching diabetes on some kinds of pigs at the zoo. Visiting hours at the zoo are between 2 pm and half an hour before sunset except on Fridays, Thursday and official holidays which are from 9 am to half an hour before sunset, he said.

Arrival daily

Migrants swarm East Germany

EAST BERLIN, (Reuter): Hundreds of poor Romanians squat in an East Berlin train station and more arrive daily, posing East Germany with a refugee problem it never knew before Eastern Europe's borders

Anxious to avert racial incidents, officials have taken many of the Romanians from the station to lodgings in school gymnasiums and a nearby army base. But the influx is rising, space is running out and authorities have yet to find a solution.

Romanians can enter East Germany without visas. Expulsion after the 30-day limit on stays is not option in East Germany's new liberal democracy, officials say, and Romania will not revert to the curbs on foreign travel that existed under executed dictator Nicolae Ceausescu. Problems

"We had no inkling of such problems before Eastern Europe opened borders and chose democracy. But now we must bow to the needs of humanity," said Col Herbert Phillip, commander of the army base command with 1,100 Romanians.

East Germany has about 87,000 foreign contract workers, most of them Vietnamese, employed in industry. But it has never experienced a spontaneous influx of foreigners until now.

Some 3,000 migrants - 80 per cent of them gypsies with a sprinkling of ethnic Turks and Bulgarians — have trooped off trains arriving at East Berlin's Lichtenberg station from southern Europe since the beginning of April.

Hundreds are coming daily and no end is in sight.

Most come to improve their standard of living in Eastern Europe's strongest economy, some apparently lured by East Germany's impending unification with rich West Germany.

Dragging battered luggage containing their worldly possessions, the dishevelled migrants settle down on station benches where they are fed by Red Cross workers. Some doze on Red Cross blankets in corners. Grimy, saucer-eyed children beg local travellers for handouts while mothers openly breast-feed babies. Some adults leave the station to sell

Every evening, Romanian interpreters employed by East Berlin's municipal government help officials persuade most migrants to move to temporary quarters.

The army base has filled up and officials are now hurriedly requisitioning school gymnasiums. Saviour

But what next? Communist rule left East Germany with a total lack of charity groups and social workers experienced in caring for needy foreigners. Officials are pleading for West German money and experiise to plug the gap.

Whether this comes before or after German union is unclear. But Bonn is regarded as the saviour. Its wealth and social services have helped integrate millions of foreigners.

East German officials lend urgency to their appeals by citing xenophobia kindled by the influx.

There have been repeated reports of violence between locals and Romanian migrants recently.
"We need so much help. We lived isolated for so many years where we could neither travel nor welcome large numbers of visitors, so we're totally unprepared for the world coming to our doorstep now," said Anetta Kahane, in charge of foreigner affairs for the East Berlin city

Some of the Romanians say they have come as "tourists" while others want medical care for ailments ranging from tuberculosis and syphilis to worms and lice. Many Romanians want to reach West Germany but lack the necessary visas. However, that barrier could well fall with unification. Asked why they left home, most cite economic misery or -especially in the gypsies' case - ethnic persecution.

At the National People's Army (NVA) barracks on the southeastern outskirts of the city, the migrants have been put up free of charge in dormitories vacated by soldiers discharged under post-communist

On a recent visit in late afternoon, Romanians were sleeping or talking in their rooms or idling in hallways. An old woman with stumps

No job notices or anything else tailored to give the Romanians a sense of purpose in East Germany were to be seen.

"There's hardly any point. These people have no education, no skills, no foreign language," said Stefan Petrescu, an ethnic Romanian teacher who has dealt with the migrants. They're just on a crazy adventure — they have all these new freedoms but they don't know how to use them."

With unemployment rocketing as East Germany shifts to a market economy in a prelude to union with West Germany, the Romanians have been landing in a social tinder box.

Authorities fear the xenophobia vented at foreign workers as well as travelling Polish black marketeers in recent months will now spread to the largely helpless Romanians.

But officials who must handle the migrants are struggling with a vacuum of legal authority amid unity negotiations with Bonn that will phase East Germany out of existence.

Mugabe gets few opponents

HARARE, (Reuter): Robert Mugabe's dream of turning Zimbabwe's multi-party democracy into a one-party state is getting the cold shoulder from some members of his own Zanu-PF Party.

Few ministers are stepping forward as open opponents of a transition to a one-party state, which became a key theme in elections in March.

But no-one from Mugabe's cabinet, which normally enthusiastically seconds its leader's proposals, has come out as a supporter either.

The president has said a multi-party system is wrong for Africa because it accentuates ethnic rivalries. Mugabe's isolation as he pursues the plan is becoming increasingly marked, diplomats say.

Discontentment "There is a plenty of discontent over the one-party issue within Zanu," one Western diplomat said. "Mugabe has a genuine conviction that unity is the way forward, but that conviction sits uncasily with the aims of some people in government."

For one outspoken critic of the one-party state, Dr Jonathon Moyo of the University of Zimbabwe, the question now is whether Mugabe can override mute opposition from the party and the electorate and force his dream of the country.

"The question is whether the president is powerful enough to carry the idea through, If he is we'll see a one-party state," Moyo told Reuters. Zanu-PF won 116 of 119 constested seats in the election, but - in a climate of repressed hostility to the one-party state - half the electorate failed to vote, partly due to apathy and to fears of postelection reprisals against the opposition.

Mussbe hailed the result as a mandate for oneparty rule, a comment not reported by the strongly pro-Zimbabwean press. But he was cautious about when it would be introduced and whether a referendum was needed to confirm support for it. He also stressed that his dream had been approved by Zanu's party congress and had been part of its election manifesto. It is not referred to in the manifesto, and Mugabe has since blown hot and cold about the idea.

He did not mention it at Zimbabwe's 10th independence anniversary in April, or during his parliamentary opening speech outlining plans for the current session two weeks ago.

"There's an argument in some circles that he's now looking for a decent exit, a way to let it die quietly. I think it's a sinister argument," Moyo said. "If the issue's raised, it's an issue. And Mugabe has continued to raise it.

At less ceremonial venues, Mugabe is still saying the one-party state is on its way.

He spoke in favour of the idea while in Switzerland last week. At a May 1 rally he told Zimbabweans that other African one-party states were being forced by Western aid donors into experimen-

Elsewhere in Africa, one-party states are beginning to move towards the kind of multi-party democracy already set up in Namibia. Mozam-bique, Kenya, Angola, and Zaire are all exploring the possibility of broadening their government sys-

The result is the marginalisation of Zimbabwe by neighbouring countries," Moyo said. "People are saying 'what's goin on? Why are you going where others are coming from? Going against the current will become unbearable."

The absence of a charismatic opponent of one-party rule in party ranks has hamstrung the timid critics from Zanu.

Veteran leader Joshua Nkomo, who led the PF-Zanu Party of southern Zimbabwe's Ndebele people until it was absorbed into Zanu last year, has Diplomats said Vice-President Nkomo, a grizzled elder statesman who with Mugabe steered Zim-babwe into independence in 1980, saw too much at risk to dare speak out.

The merger between Zapu and Zanu ended years of bloody conflict between Ndebeles and the Shons people who form the backbone of Mugabe's support. Diplomats said Nkomo did not want to do anything to restart the unrest.

"You might have thought he (Nkomo) would have entered the debate by now, but I can see why he might not," said Nicholas Ndebele, director of Harare's Catholic Commission for Peace and Jus-

Condemned

"If anyone fought for their country it was him, but he's been accused of dividing the country ... of destroying everything he himself had fought for," said Ndebele, whose human rights group condemned the one-party state during the election.

"I think we can interpret the silence of some senior members of government in terms of fear they might lose their jobs," he said. "Feelings against the one-party state are very, very strong, but the president is also very, very powerful.

"I think many Zanu members believe it will come by whether or not they like it, and then if they've spoken out publicly they will be in a difficult posi-tion," Ndebele added.

Discreet hints of rebellion are in the air. Labour Secretary John Nkomo told consistently members at the weekend that opposition parties should not be harassed as it was their constitutional right to oppose the government.
Finance Minister Bernard Chidzero, whose aim of attracting foreign investors to Zimbabwe is being compromised by Mugabe's support for a one-party state, said last week in the United States: "In my part of the world there are many countries which are one-party states, and changes are beginning to take place even there. I think this should be encouraged and we ought to learn a great deal from what has happened in Eastern Europe."

Diplomats say several Zanu members at a post-election Central Committee meeting blamed the unpopular one-party state idea for voter apathy, but the president ignored them.

Moyo said the veiled criticisms by Zanu members should be taken with a pinch of salt.

"To stay there they should insinuate (to voters)

they don't like it but must implement it," he said, adding:

"Everyone who's criticising the one-party state is saying we need a referendum, and no African leader has ever not won a referendum.

Real reforms under way in Albania

TIRANA, (Reuter): A package of human rights and economic reforms in communist Albania appears to be a genuine change of direction after decades of rigidity and isolation, according to Albanian and Western diplomatic sources.

The reforms were announced last week in time for an unprecedented visit to Tirana by United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar that itself symbolised a new opening to the world by Europe's last orthodox communist state.

Among the most significant changes was a decision to allow every Albanian to travel abroad, a right denied to all but a politically reliable elite during four decades of reclusion and control. "It is the end of a taboo," author Ismail Kadare, Albania's leading literary figure, said of the new

"The question of passports is not just an adminis-trative one," he said. "It is a very new change of attitude and more small changes will stem from it."

Religious The reforms, which also include lifting a ban on religious propaganda in this atheist state, were set firmly in the context of the Albanian Communist Party's continued commitment to one-party rule.

Diplomats said they had been prompted at least in part by fear that popular uprisings against Stalinist regimes in Eastern Europe last year would spark similar unrest in Albania. But they also showed that President Ramiz Alia, who is also party leader, was convinced of the need to reform the ultra-orthodox system imposed by the country's Stalinist leader Enver Hoxha during his 40-year rule. "Alia is someone who has understood that he has got to change his regime," one Western diplomat

"Coming after 40 years of absolute rule by Hoxha, that wasn't easy," he added. "But Alia is someone quite capable of managing this evolution." Alia has said change will be gradual, but told Western reporters during a rare meeting last week that it was also unstoppable.

Alia, 64, succeeded Hoxha on his death in 1985, taking over the reins of a tiny Balkan country, the poorest in Europe, whose economy, human rights provisions and international ties had been stifled by a policy of strict self-reliance.

Hoxha, Albania's wartime partisan leader, regarded the country as under constant threat of invasion, a fear bred by a long history of foreign domination and fuelled since World War II by ideological rifts with both the Soviet Union and

One of the starkest illustrations of this fear are the the tens of thousands of concrete pill-boxes that dot and blot virtually every field in Albania.

It is hard to find a country where energy and its sources are not directly linked with strategic condi-tions. During the last fifty years, the world has witnessed about forty separatist movements but only Pakis-tan and a small island nation of Cyprus, share the sad distinction of losing a part of their land due to foreign military intervention. So it is this unforgettable national tragedy which shapes Pakistan's strategic thinking including its options in the field of energy.

Soviet experience shows it clearly that without econ-omic power, military power tends to be meaningless.

Therefore, in present strategic situation, if Pakistan has to escape Soviet late, it has to work overtime to develop its military as well as economic strength. Consequently, in a short time frame Pakistan has no option but to grabanything to fill gaps in its energy supply. Needs are so hard-pressing that the government of Pakistan should invite private sector to invest in energy projects. Pakistani expatriates with more organized savings.

Pakistani leadership without any exception has been conscious of the fact that they need more than conventional forces to create a strategic balance with their big brother. But they were overtaken by history and it was after the tradegy of 1970 that Pakistan's most well-read

Question

It is not a question of simple energy. It is the ultimate option in Pakistan's national struggle for honourable survival. If detached from strategic questions, energy options are determined by the geophysical conditions of a country. Pakistan, due to its geographic conditions, is a hydraulic society and hydro-electric projects should be its natural options. Even today, more than 53 per cent of electricity is generated by hydel projects.

Due to their dependence on one great source of water, hydraulic societies are united by nature. But some short-sighted Pakistam politicians are trying to defeat the nature and are using river waters to generate defeat the nature and are using river waters to generate animosity between the people of Pakistan. So the natural option is not the practical option. Pakistan has not been able to realise its coal utilisation policies and its practical energy options have become very limited. There is no doubt that less decisive attitude could turn most of Pakistan into uninhabitable land without a nuclear explosion. Village technology of biogas. appropriate technologies for solar energies and wind-mills are being developed in Pakistan, but a country running on load shedding cannot wait for their final

Of course national decision making should not be confined to a short span of time. While thinking of future, we know that present man-made technology is disaster prone. The potential of a given technology, including the energy technology, to cause disaster is somewhat directly proportional to its output capacity. An oil burning stove can burn a house and a Chernobyl disaster can depopulate several cities. To save the earth and species living on it, man has, at last, to opt for technologies which are in harmony with nature.

To stage the great econe. Pakistan needs futuristic

To stage the great escape, Pakistan needs futuristic research institutions. Subcontinent had to lose its dependence for missing industrial revolution. Now Pakistan has to make it sure that its gap in traditional technology, with the developed world, does not create a trap for its national sovereignty. At the same time it has to initiate a new industrial revolution, which will be in complete harmony with nature.
Pakistan is blessed with world-class scientists! Those who want to see Pakistan a future force, should organise their capabilities for this purpose.

Pakistan needs something more than abstract "inter-collegiate" debates, on its options. Expatriates have always provided leadership to subcontinent. Les Pakistani professionals and traders pool their talents and money to build futuristic institutions in their homeland. Stand up and be counted.

Trick backfired on political system

IT was a sorry day in Texas when Ann Richards wonthe Democratic nomination over Jim Mattex, in what has been described as one of the dirtiest came paigns in the history of the state. It was sad because the dirty tricks used in the fight backfired on the political system as we know it.

When all the results were in, Political Mudelingers of America (the organization of dirty pool managers) called an emergency meeting to find out where they had gone wrong.

"This is the lowest day in the history of political campaigning," One-Eyed Robemutter declared. "It may mean that fighting in the guner doesn't work, and we could all be out of work for the 1992 elections."

Shorty Benzedrine said, "Let's not panic. Instituces our victous, below-the-belt personal attacks on Ann Richards didn't cauch on doesn't mean we should discard them as a fair campaign tactic. Don't forget she's a woman, and occasionally dirty tricks can backfire when you're trying to defeat one of them for public office. Going on national television and accusing your opposent of using dope is still a good political move and should not be eliminated just because of one primary in Texas."

Alonzo Mohley stood up, "As you know, I was one of the first people in this organization to sling mud. It was working well up until the Richard's contest. My analysis is not that we threw too much mud at her, but that we didn't throw enough. There were a lot more snalysis is not that we threw too much und at her, but that we didn't throw enough. There were a lot more things she could have been accused of doing.

"For example, people are pretty nervous about hepatitis these days. I urged Mattox's people to make a commercial showing her at a blood bank with a voice-over saying. "How many people will Ann Richards infect?" But they felt that it was too dirty, and they preferred to stick with the dope campaign. "With all due respect," said Michael Minimal, "I believe that we're breast-beating too much over this. The public expects its to take the low road, The trick is to be nasty and untruthful at the same time."

Roger Dodger asked, "Does that mean we can continue to show a man on death row endorsing our opponent for giving him weekend leave?"

"Yes, but we have to be careful about how we show the opposing candidate pushing an old lady in a wheelchair down the stairs. Ann Richards, victory was an accident. The clean-election people are using it as an example of what can happen to candidates who resort to dirty tricks. We have to prove to the politicos that we can still win elections with a maddog-attack approach. Our living depends on bad taste and no securates.

Rapido Doyle said, "Everything was going so well.

I thought that after 1988 the appetite for dirty campaigns would be imatiable. I'm not sure I want to stay in politics if I have to maintain an ethical standard." One-Eyed Robemutter-tried to sound upbest, "Forget Am Richards and go for the big one in '92." Willie Horton is still alive and well for another presidential campaign. We've hired mud-slingers the best in the business — and the politicians are going to need us as soom as their ratings in the polls drop. Our message to them is, one Ann Richard's victory does not mean that they can't continue to use Shorty Benzederine suggested, "How about us having a film festival to show all the dirty commercials we made in the last four years? This would give the candidates in '92' an opportunity to see how hitting below the belt can benefit them.

One-Eyed Robemumer said, "Good idea, Shortly. If we're going to sing mud, we may as well relax and enjoy it."

PLO realigning military ranks to upgrade combat potential

It said that under the new plan all Palestinian forces have been shifted to two Arab countries, Iraq and Libya, from Algeria, Sudan, and the two Yemeni states, which hosted the Palestinian commandos after the exodus from Lebanon in 1982

Call to protect

OCCUPIED Jerusalem, May 18, (AP): A human rights report published yesterday said 159 Arabchildren were killed and as many as 63,000 were wounded by bullets, beatings and tear gas during the first two years of the Palestinian uprising.
"Many soldiers consider Palestinian children's lives to be of little worth," alleges the report, which focuses only on army activity. It says violence against children is "severe, indiscriminate, multidimensional

The findings were rejected by the army and criticised by an Israeli human rights activist as being one-sided.

Lt. Col. Moshe Fogel, an army spokesman, countered that pro-PLO activists used the children as shields during protests and were respons-. : We are faced with an uprising which turns its children into martyrs and actually encourages minors to participate in violent activities against Israeli soldiers whether actively or passively," he said. Fogel added that researchers never approached the army for reaction about Palestinian versions of events.

Thomas Hammarberg, head of the Swedish group and a former secretary-general of Amnesty International, said Israeli leaders had failed to investigate abuses adequately and had given soldiers the impression they had freedom to do as they liked. 'It could be the soldiers believe plastic and rubber-coated bullets are non-lethal," he said in an interview. "But I think it begins to take the form of the intentional if they let it continue when they know the

He said the importance of the study was in documenting the scope of the child casualties "which is far higher than has been reported by the middle."

The report said 106 of the 159 children died from gunshot wounds in the first two years and 13 have been shot to death so far this year. The uprising in the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank is in its 30th month. By comparison, the Israeli information centre for human rights in the occupied territories said 148 children died through May 1.

Spokeswoman Zahava Galon said tear gas deaths were excluded as too difficult to substantiate and no reliable injury estimates ere availa-

The army disputed the report's claim that "the vast majority" of soldiers were not punished for wrongdoing. Fogel said soldiers were court-martialed or disciplined for improper use of force in 25 percent of the 79 army-counted cases in which children under 14 were fatally wounded in the past 29 months.

He cited one case in which a soldier was sentenced to two months in jail and six months probation after shooting a 13-year-old girl in Gaza's beach camp last July 26.

A military court gave two Israeli soldiers suspended jail terms for kicking a Palestinian child and stubbing out a lighted cigarette on him, an army spokesman said yesterday.

The court gave Corporal Doron Algazi and Sergeant-Major Yaacov Bouchbut three-months suspended sentences for improper behaviour towards a 13-year-old child in the occupied West Bank city of Nablus after a clash with stone-throwers last August.

Israel considering buying supercomputer from West German firm

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM, May 18. (Reuter): Despairing of securing a licence to import a US supercomputer, Israel is considering buying one from a West German firm, an official of the leading Israeli technology institute said today.

bland Harriston and Harriston Professor Brian Silver, vice-president for development at Haifa's Technion Israel Institute of Technology, said representatives of Bonn-based Supernum GMBH visited Israel recently to present a supercomputer. "We ordered a supercomputer from the American company Cray but we doubt it will be delivered because the United States has refused to give an export licence for it," Silver told Reuters. The US government bars the export of powerful computers to countries it thinks could use them to develop nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles.

"That left us with no option. But over the past year a German company which has government backing produced a supercomputer," Silver added.

Supernum's "parallel" supercomputer is based on completely different principles to its US counterpart but is also of great interest to the Technion, Silver said.

US press reports said Washington withheld licences to sell supercomputers to the Technion and to Israel military industries out of concern over alleged Israeli co-operation with South Africa in developing a medium-range

Western diplomats told Reuters that Israel was angered by reports that United States was allowing the same supercomputer to be exported to Saudi Arabia.

SLA becoming more efficient

KFAR HOUNEH, Lebanon, May 18, (Reuter): The schoolmaster fleeing the violence of Beirut failed to understand the hand signals from the distant Lebanese guards and followed the first car towards the hill-top checkpoint.

"Halt," bellowed the guard. He then swiftly raised his US-made M16 rifle and fired two rounds over the roof of the second car to ensure it waited its turn at the fortified gateway to the south.

Welcome to Israel's "security zone" in south Lebanon.

Rule one: All vehicles are only permitted to approach checkpoints one at a time -- to avoid-hit-and-run attacks.

Rule two: Civilian vehicles must carry at least two people when moving -- to deter lone suicide bombers. Rule three: On seeing an Israeli army patrol approaching, a driver must pull to the side and wait until it passes — to stop car bombs being rammed into convoys. 'I'm not sure about rule three," said an officer in the Israeli-backed South Lebanon

Army (SLA) militia, charged with protecting the zone and Israel's northern border against guerrilla attacks. "If I wanted to blow myself up in a car filled with explosives as an IDF (Israeli Defence forces) patrol passed, I would feel happier stationary than fumbling with the trigger and timing and trying to drive.

"Still it seems to work," he said.

And increasingly so does the Israelideclared security zone — a swathe of territory between two km and 14 km (one to nine miles) wide north of Israel's border stretching 85 km (52 miles) from the Mediterranean in the west to Mount Hermon in the east. SLA, Israeli and United Nations commandos said the first four months of this year were some of the quiestest in the zone since Israel withdrew most of its troops from Lebanon in 1985 after its 1982 invasion. In addition to the low level of guerrilla attacks and other incidents, they agreed that the SLA had become a more professional force at an estimated cost to Israel of $3

The militia is supported by several hundred Israeli troops in the south which are reinforced when needed. The 5,900 UN peacekeepers in the region hold that the SLA is illegal and refuse officially to recognise it.

"If you compare the first four months of last year with the same period this year the number of commando operations are 25 per cent of what they were," said SLA commander General Antoine Lahd, largely recovered from an attempted assassination 18

"Also most operations now consist of shooting in the direction of our positions from far away. In the past they tried to occupy them," said Lahd, who added that the SLA was at full strength with 3,000 militiamen.

The general saw the reduction in attacks as proof of the improved strength of the SLA through better training and equipment which led to high commando losses, deterring groups from launching attacks.

But UN officers said that although the SLA had become more effective, this did not fully explain the large decline in commando operations.

"The last four months were very quiet but maybe it depends more on the situation in Beirut," said Colonel Odd Helge Olsen, commander of the Norwegian batallion of the United Nations Interim Forces in South Lebanon (Unifil).

The UN officers said a power struggle in the Shi'ite Muslim community between the Syrian-backed Amal militia and pro-Iranian Hezbollah had largely switched the groups' attention away from raids on the security

"Since the Amal-Hezbollah war began in 1988, the trend has been for operations in the south to be 50 per cent down," said a UN source. "We used to count two attacks a day but in the last few months we had one or less a day and low casualties."

The SLA and IDF still have some problems but now for instance the SLA can directly call in Israeli helicopters or artillery support," the source said. "No other militia in Lebanon can match their resources."

The source said incidents of SLA militiamen firing at Unifil positions had fallen, "The IDF is even testing them, seeing if it can stay on the border and let the SLA hold the zone," he said.

Truce holds in east Beirut

BEIRUT, May 18, (Reuter): fragile truce was holding in Lebanon's Christian enclave for the third day today but there were no signs of a political com-promise to bring lasting peace.

Security sources said army units loyal to General Michel Aoun and Lebanese Forces (LF) militiamen kept their guns silent in east Beirut and along a maze of frontlines to the north and north-

Despite occasional sniper fire in some areas, thousands of civilians ventured out to clear rubble and patch the shattered windows of their homes.

But crossing points linking LF-held areas to Aoun-controlled territory remained closed for the 10th consecutive day. The general's men gave no explana-tion for shutting the passages. The church-mediated cease-fire went into effect late on Wednesday, halting more than a week of fierce artillery duels.

Political sources said it had no chance of lasting unless consolidated by a political compromise between Aoun and LF chief Samir Geagea. They said there was no serious attempt by mediators to bridge the gap between the two. Dozens of ceasefires have collapsed since the inter-Christian battle for control of east Beirut began on January 31.

Aoun triggered the fighting when he ordered the LF to disarm and disband. More than 1,075 people have been killed and 3,150 wounded and over a billion dollars' worth of damage has been done in the enclave.

Some 200,000 of the area's 900,000 inhabitants have fled to other parts of the country or

FAO meet to combat killer fly

ROME, May 18, (Kuna): Representatives of more than 40 donor countries in the Food and Agriculture Organisation held an extraordinary meeting here today to discuss ways of combatting a killer fly threatening the animal wealth and human life in the near east, southern parts of the Mediterranean and Africa.

FAO's director Eduard Soma described the situation as very dangerous, urging for provision of required funds, before it is too late.

The representatives are discussing an $85 million programme to fight the killer fly, scientifically known as cochliomyis hominovorax.

FLN's biggest show of force

Reply to fundamentalists

ALGIERS, May 18. (AP): An estimated 100,000 people marched vesterday through central Algiers, singing patriotic songs and chanting for the ruling National Liberation Front Proclaimed as a "national demonstration of fraternity and solidarity," the march was intended as a reply to the fundamen-talist Islamic Salvation Front and the pro-democracy movement, which organised similar, separate demonstrations during the past month.

By contrast with last week's pro-democracy demonstration, which drew about 100,000 people in pouring rain, the ruling party's march was favoured by sunshine. The fundamentalists' march on April 20 drew an estimated 200,000 people.

Many of the marchers yesterday were farm workers and nearly all were men. Most appeared old enough to have experienced Algeria's eight-year war of liberation against France which ended 28 years ago.

It was the ruling party's first major demonstration in Algiers since bloody riots erupted in October 1988 against unemployment, low living standards and the dictatorship of a selfappointed clique.

The demonstrators carried thousands of Algerian flags and political banners, many of them directred against those who have amassed huge fortune during the past 25 years. These fortunes caused much of the anti-government resentment which led to the the market's going next," said one London dealer. The index's all-time closing high of 2,463.7 was set on January 3. Dealers said yesterday's rally had been inspired a shortage of stock for sale and by signs that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government was softening its stand on a key issue of European Community monctary policy.

In the view of some of the markets, the shift could lead to sterling soon entering the exchange rate mechanism of the European Monetary system which in theory could lead to an casing of monetary policy and lower interest rates.

They said the treaty did nothing to ease lingering doubts about the cost of German unification and monetary union, adding that the mark would stay under pressure for the time

Plan to cut spending deficit

ROME, May 18, (Reuter): Italy's cabinet approved a mixture of state spending cuts and revenue increases today to try to brake a runaway 1990 public sector deficit.

Treasury Minister Guido Carli said the moves could help push down high local interest

The mid-year revision to the budget plan, virtually an annual event in Italy, seeks to save about 11.75 trillion lire ($10 billion) and bring the deficit closer to its initial target of a 133 trillion lire ($110 billion) shortfall.

"The operation should get us back closer to our initial deficit target." Carli told a news conference.

The package contains a 6.25 trillion lire ($5.15 billion) boost to revenues, including higher water and gas charges, and 5.5 trillion lire ($4.5 billion) of spending cuts which the government has yet to detail.

Although Italy can point to one of Europe's highest economic growth rates, the heavy state deficit has long been regarded as a major problem.

Already the highest of any major European economy, it had threatened to overshoot its target by over 10 per cent this year, according to government

American Business Council of the Gulf Countries But they stressed they represented only them-selves and the general proposition that US trade should be increased.

At a press conference and slide presentation at the US Chamber of Commerce, the two American businessmen left little doubt about the negative economic impact to the US of the foreign earned income tax. They said the US was the only nation on earth that taxes its citizens outside its own borders; that factor alone discourages Americans from working in the In 1982 the US had 17 per cent of GCC business, a figure which by 1989 had dropped to just 13 per cent,

Tighe and Stockwell remarked. They charged that the US tax on unearned income was "partially responsible" for the decline. Two-way trade last year was $22 billion, only a small portion of what it could be minus the disincentives, they added. They stressed that American's global competitors laboured under that tax or other strictures like the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) which they called "a key US-imposed trade disincentive in the region."

The American executives underscored the key importance of the Gulf nations, noting these countries possess 137 years worth of oil reserves while the US has about 10 years, the USSR 15 and the European Economic Community (EEC) 14 years. Stockwell and Tighe said they also were dealing with standards for the Gulf region, pointing out that

They said they had gotten "some very, very interesting responses" from the Congressmen and their staffs, "most of them positive."

Eastern Europe starts speeding up pace of currency reform

LONDON, May 18, (Reuter): Reformist policy-makers in Eastern Europe, desperate to attract foreign investment and put trade on a new international footing, are speeding up plans to make their practically worthless currencies acceptable in the West.

Hungary and Czechoslovakia both signalled this week that currency convertibility was a top priority in new economic reform programmes, following the lead of Poland whose shock therapy was based on a strategy to restore value to the zloty.

Even the Soviet Union, where debate over economic reform has split Kremlin policy-makers, is being pushed down the road to convertibility by disintegration of the old communist pattern of trade based on barter and

"The Poles took a gamble freeing up their exchange rate but it has taken the pressure off the economy," said Ingrid Iversen, economist at American Express Bank in New York. "It can serve as a good model for moving to convertibility."

For decades under communism, demand for heavily subsidized goods in the domestic market and exchange rates were way out of line with international trade. It was often a crime to take money out of the country or hold

Poland has yet to advance to a third stage or "full convertibility" as in industrial countries where individuals have free access to currency and there are no capital controls.

Economists believe few East European nations will manage this before the end of the decade as they struggie with huge structural problems left over from the communist era.

But they do predict the new democratic legitimacy being conferred on governments in Hungary and Czechoslovakia will enable authorities to take tough decisions necessary to put their trade on a limited convertible basis relatively quickly.

Unpopularity at home makes it difficult for Gorbachev to introduce price reforms in a move to a convertible rouble. But at the same time, the disintegration of Comecon system is force ing Moscow to trade in convertible currencies. Poland, after negotiations with Moscow, announced on Thursday would switch its trade with the Soviet Union to hard currencies at world prices from January I next year.

The same is true for trade with Essai Germany where the issue has become forced by Bonn and East Bering agreement to replace the East German currency with the West German ma from July 1.

Basel-based Bank for International Settlements and released today, said new deposits by non-Opec Third World countries rose by $14.6 billion while claims on them by the reporting banks dropped by $4.7 billion.

It said Taiwanese deposits went up by $3.7 billion and that the country had repaid $1.9 billion worth of earlier loans. China eliminated its net debtor position after adding a further 3.5 billion to its deposits. Malaysia's deposits with the banks reporting to BIS went up by $1.3 billion, described in the survey as another significant increase Identified claims on Latin American countries, which have declined continuously since 1987, fell by a further $3.2 billion. Claims on Brazil and Argentina contracted by 2.2 billion and $1.4 billion respectively, partly as a result of write-offs and debt conversion programmes.

Deposits by members of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries increased by $7.2 billion after declining by $6.8 billion in the previous quarter. At the same time, claims on Opec countries rose by $5.7 billion.

New credits extended by commercial banks to Eastern Europe in the fourth quarter totalled $2 billion, a pace unchanged from the previous three months. New each for the Soviet Union and East Germany which at the same time withdrew $500 million worth of its deposits.

The survey is based on data reported by banks in the group of ten leading industrialised countries plus banks in Luxembourg, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Norway, Spain, Bahamas, Bahrain, Cayman Islands, Hong Kong, Netherlands Antilles and Singapore as well as branches of US banks in Panama.

The BIS estimated that net international bank lending during the last three months of 1989 totalled $100 billion, twice the amount for the same quarter a

Imports, mainly raw materials, from Eastern Europe rose 43.5 per cent to $224.7 million from $156.6 million.

Turkey plans to increase its share in East European markets by boosting total exports which fell by 0.3 per cent in 1989 from the previous year, officials said. Turkey's Eximbank last week gave Romania an export credit of $50 million and has offered similar loans to Hungary and Poland. It gave consumer credits totalling $300 million to the Soviet Union in 1989.

The bank is expected to sign an agreement with the Soviet Union in the next few months for a fresh credit of $350 million to finance construction projects undertaken by Turkish firms, bank officials said.

Turkish exports to Eastern Europe rose to $947 million in 1989 from $554 million a yer ago. while imports went up to $1.1 billion last year from $870 million in 1988.

SANAA, May 18, (Reuter): The central banks of North and South Yemen, preparing for the merging of the two countries, agreed yesteday to protect their market. Both banks recently devalued their currencies nearly 24 per cent with the new exchange rate for the US dollar fixed at 12 North Yemeni rials and 0.461 South Yemeni dinars. But traders said yesterday the dollar's value against the rial on the black market was still 33 per cent higher than the official rate. Radio Sanaa said the two central banks agreed to "take all necessary measures to defend their exchange rates against other currencies and fix those rates through tightening monetary controls ... and intensifying steps against smuggling." A huge smuggling operation, controlled by tribesmen in the North, is one of the problems facing the two Yemens as they prepare to merge later this month after 300 yeas as separate states. Bankers and economists say the black market trade with neighbouring oil-rich Saudi Arabia is worth around $2 billion a year and supplies most of North Yemen's private sector needs.

NICOSIA, Cyprus, May 18, (AP): Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani yesterday foresaw a cooling of the radical revolution which swept his country more than II years ago, Tehran Radio reported.

the lowest since December 1983.

Rafsanjani predicted that his people will likely be concerned with welfare and economic wellbeing in the next decade.

The radio, monitored in Cyprus, quoted him as saying that "as the revolutionary conditions of the country are normalised, society's political sensitivity will decrease, and attraction to welfare and material issues will Speaking to provincial officials in Tehran, he told them to "move according to the conditions of the time, and create an economic-political balance in society in accordance with the government's precise programmes," the radio said.

American trade gap climbs

Rafsanjani is trying to pull his country out of the economic mess left by the chaotic 1979 revolution and a devastating eight-year war with Iraq.

Sources in Tehran report growing public dissatisfaction with the economy. Iranians daily must contend with shortages of almost all consumer goods, runaway inflation-

and an artificially inflated currency which is all but worthless abroad. Since his election in July, Rafsanjani has tried to repair Iran's pariah international image by tempering the revolutionary hostility towards the West, from where he hopes to attract investment and advanced technology for the flagging economy.

As a result, he has been under attack by a rival anti-Western radical camp, led by former Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi and Ahmad Khomeini, son of the late Ayatollah Khomeini.

The radicals fear that relations with the West would compromise the "neither East nor West" principle laid down by Khomeini to preserve Iran's neutrality vis-a-vis the superpowers, and spell the end of the revolution.

country," and said this "confused the population." Speaking to provincial officials a day before Rafsanjani, he said that "if the 'neither East nor West, principle is stressed. then the people must be told to what extent this is being followed, and why it is not being adhered to further." In an apparent attack on Rafsanjani's administration for what the radicals see as compromises with the West. Khomeini said that "the point of > compromise or no compromise must be defined. Rafsaniani's rivals have accused him of giving in to the West by gaining release of two American hostages last month from their pro-tranian captors.

Narthana celebrated sixth anniversary by organising Parent's Day with a dance and music night at the Indian embassy hall recently. About 500 people attended

The programme was inaugurated by Prema Mohan, the mother of the senior-most student (first student) of Narthana Kumari Ranjini Mohan. Narthana started with only two students to learn Bharathanatyam and Mohiniyattam later on was able to train more than 200 students. At present about 60 students are regularly getting their dance coaching from Prameela

The programme was tollowed by 10 dance items Bharathanatyam, Mohiniyattam and tolk numbers. Second part of the programme was a music concert lead by prominent singers Sunny and Sasikala. Also Saraswathy Appukuttan Sunny, a classical Keerthanam and Kuman Sabhasi Appukuttan and Sahyan Appukutian also sang some songs.

M. T. Abraham distributed the prizes. Later Prameela wished all the best for Narthana's outgoing students. Geetha Philip and Sindu Appukuttan.

Preservation or progress?

Last year leading British actors and actresses joined the protest against the redevelopment of London's Rose Theatre where Shakespeare is thought to have performed. Conservation has always been an uphill struggle against the demands of progress even in Britain which has been linked to a great historical and archaeological site. Preservation of Progress tries to discover whether it is possible to protect monuments of the past and construct modern day buildings and businesses.

"Etian's Watch" is the tale of a Jewish child, orphaned by the Second World War, who yearns for security and fantasises an identity to obtain it. The story is written by two World Services listeners living in Israel: Zena Holland, a Scot who settled there in 1953, and Cila Kupissonoff who was born in Russia and raised in Belgium where she lived during the war years. Throughout the four years of Nazi occupation she lived in the Arden mountains thereby escaping deportation. She is a social worker with a special interest in child welfare.

The Ultimate Invention

Simon Callow and Alan Bennett star in Don Haworth's play which is set in the 19th century. Grand Duke Alexander has cash flow problems, his duchy is bankrupt, and rich, single princesses are none too keen to marry impoverished grand dukes. What can be done? Alexander decides to entrust his future to an inventor whose latest masterpiece will, hopefully, restore the duchy's fortune.

A hot air balloon over Kuwait

The week-long Austrian Festival at Kuwait International Hotel sponsored by Austrian Airlines had a unique and exciting aspect - a hot air balloon which flew over Kuwait! Due to windy weather conditions it could not start its maiden voyage the first few days. Finally the wind calmed down and the pilot, Josef Starkbaum announced that he was ready to be airborne! It was a breathtaking sight as the balloon unfurled and burst into brilliant colours as it soared gracefully up, up and away. Josef Starkbaum is a captain of Austrian Airlines. He is the world champion in gas balloon flying and second in world ranking for hot air balloon flying.

WE met for lunch the next day. The atmosphere was right to revive nostalgic memories. Princess Erma is a beautiful Italian woman. I was curious to know what attracted the Italian beauty to the magic and mystery of the East

When I put the question to her, she smiled and explained: "I believe in reincarnation. When I first met Farouq I felt he was no stranger. Perhaps, I knew him 3,000 years ago — in the Nile Valley or on thoshores of the Black Sea. Maybe, we had been together way back in history. At last, we met in Rome."

Like Cleopatra stole Antonio when Caesar invaded the Nile Valley, Erma seemed to have avenged that incident in history. When I asked her about it, she laughed and quipped: "Cleopatra had captured two of our leaders; after Farouq, I'm waiting for the second."

Erma was brought up in high society. She said she comes from a princely family and her ancestors were kings. Some members of her family were patriarchs in the Catholic Church.

The possibility of my marrying a Muslim gave rise to fears that I might change my religion," she explained.

The princess said Farouq did not leave any assets. "He only left great financial and moral burdens and commitments." she said.

Princess Erma had talked about Farouq's sadness but had never explained the reasons. I asked her to throw some light on the former Egyptian king's psychological state of mind.

She said: "He was deeply wounded when he boarded his yatch Mahrousa. His burden was heavier than the bags of jewels and clothes he carried. I was told he led a luxurious life in Egypt. His lifestyle was the subject of gossip."
Farouq was born under the sign of Pisces, which is characterised by instability. Princess Erma told me Farouq loved to travel to Naples and other places in Italy. He also admired natural beauty. Princess Erma's grandfather was hired by King Fuad of Egypt to look after the palace

The aroma of Italian cuisine wafted in the room. We were in a self-service restaurant where the chef prepares the food before the guests. After ordering lunch, I resumed our conversation.

The question foremost in my mind was who killed Farouq. Was he (murdered) by the intelligence during Nasser's time or vise it the woman who was with him at the time of his death. I also wondered if he died a naturai death.

"Police reports said Farouq died of brain haemmorthage," she said.
On that fateful day, Erma was in Monte Carlo waiting for Farouq's arrival when the news of his death was broken to her. She was greatly disturbed when she was told that he was in the company of another

She recalled: "He told me to go to Monte Carlo and promised to follow me so that he could gamble in the casinos. He lied to me about his affairs with other women. I felt that he had got me out of the way to carry on with the other woman.

Erma was pregnant at the time she was in Monte Carlo. A day after Faroug's death, she had a miscarriage and lost the exile and who had dethroned him.

"Farouq never spoke to me about such things; he only talked about music, jewellery and travel. Only once he mentioned that he had left his country because he could not bear to see his people fighting the army. But he never spoke against Nasser or Mohammed Najeeb, the men who came to power after him. I am told he was dethroned because Britain had ignored him," Erma said. After lunch, Erma and I drove around Kome to see the historical sites built by Roman Caesars. When I dropped her at home, I made another appointment to see her in the evening. I went to my hotel and waited for evening - for the next ren-

Risk factors in ovarian cancer

By Karen Klinger

BOSTON, (UPI): Of the cancers that affect the female reproductive tract, ovarian cancer has the highest fatality rate, striking tens of thousands of women each year. Doctors say it is so deadly because it works silently. often causing little more than vague sysmptoms such as back pain, fatigue and a sense of pelvic fullness until it has spread beyond the ovaries. When the disease is diagnosed and treated early, a woman has more than a 90 per cent chance of surviving at least five years, a recent study found. But when the cancer is not discovered until it has spread past the pelvis, the outlook can be bleak. Overall, the fiveyear survival rate for ovarian cancer is only 38 per cent, said Dr M. Steven Piver of the Rosewell Park Cancer Institute in Buffalo, New York.

In an attempt to get the word out about the risks and detection of ovarian cancer. Piver recently teamed up with actor Gene Wilder to create a series of public service ressages scheduled to air nationwide on television sta-tions for the next three months. Until her death in May 1989, Wilder was married to the country's best known victim of ovarian cancer - comedian Gilda Rader, who died at the age of 42 after a three-year battle with the disease.

Although Radner had some typical early symptoms of the disorder. Piver said it took a year for doctors to diagnose what was wrong. By then, it was to late to save

Piver believes that if Radner's doctors had known that she had an unusual family history of ovarian cancer, they would have ordered diagnostic tests that might have detected the disease while her chances for survival were still

In 1985, Piver treated one of Radner's first cousins for ovarian cancer. During the next four years, he discovered not only that Rader had the disease as well, but that her aunt and possibly, another cousin and a grandmother had

With that kind of family history, Piver said Radner's chances of developing the disease were many times the onein-70 risk the average woman faces. He believes a woman who has two first-degree relatives with ovarian cancer two sisters or a sister and a mother — has a 50 per cent chance of developing the disease herself.

The risk is not as great for women with affected relatives farther removed — such as cousins and aunts — but it still is much higher than normal, he said.

To track the cancer through families, Piver set up a computerized registry at Rosewell Park in 1981 with names of victims found to be related.

The registry was recently renamed the Gilda Radner Familial Ovarian Cancer Registry. It now contains names of nearly 1,000 women from about 400 families.
Piver encourages doctors to add names to the registry, as well as to check through it to see if a patient's relatives are

Because the disease rarely strikes women under 35, Piver said those with a strong family history should undergo genetic counseling and start weighing their options in their 20s. By their early 30s, he said they should have manual pelvic examinations every six months and diagnostic blood and ultrasound tests once a year.

QUESTION: Is there a condition where muscle turns into bone? A friend of mine had an X-ray of his arm, and there was a piece of bone seen that normally isn't there. The dector says that the only way to treat it is to remove it with an operation, but wants to wait a while to see how big it's going to get. Is this right? Please help us.

Answer: The condition is known as "myositis

Actually the process begins with an injury, usually a contasion or strain, in which the muscle is torn, and blood collects in a clot called a "hematoma." The most common spot for these types of injuries is the thigh, followed by the mid-arm. The bone formation usually only occurs on severe injuries, and may also involve a clot infection after a respiratory infection. Slowly the clot is transformed into bone, possibly from bone cells that came from an injury to the coursing of the bone cells that came from an injury to the covering of the bone (periosteum), which might have occured at the same time. The bony mass keeps enlarging for as long as aix or seven weeks, after which a process of esorption begins. Small masses may disappear com-irritant such as alcohol, tobacco, spicy foods, or too-sharp teeth, "leukoplakia" the name give to certain plaques or patches on the tongue, can also signal a vitamin A or B deficiency, syphilis, or mouth cancer. The plaques may be of different shapes or colours. They can be white, grey, yellow or speckled.

Before you assume the worst, banish alcohol, tobacco and spicy foods from your life; satisfy yourself that your teeth or dentures aren't scraping your tongue. And see your doctor as soon as possible about a biopsy, the best way to tell a dangerous plaque from a harmless one. By examing the tissues under a microscope, he or she can soon tell if it's serious or a relatively benign condition. If the patch is small, your doctor may be able to remove it surgically or cauterize it on the spot. No matter what the diagnosis, your physician probably will want you to have your tongue checked every three to six months, to be sure

They certainly treat foreigners uniquely: We resident aliens are fingerprinted. While gaijin (outside people) are given much leeway in Japan, they also face pressures to conform. On the street, the Japanese wear blank faces, like a nation of zombies. But they're not really that cold. Rather, because they are such an emotional people, to look seriously into a stranger's eyes would require making a close bond. Better to easy for American trade negotiators, who have learned the hard way that "yes" often means "no," and that the Japanese win arguments simply by changing the argument - for the sake of harmony, of taurants, and Western democracy. My favourite new invention is a bed pillow with built-in speakers: to help you go to sleep, you can play either the chirp of frogs or the sound of a moving train. For 120 years, Japan has rushed to appear civilized by adopting much from the West, without really absorbing it. European cars, for instance, are now quite. popular, especially BMWs. But what really matters is that owning one helps boost prestige. Status is having a tan only on your left arm. Then everyone knows you drive a foreign car, which has a steering wheel on the left, unlike Japanese cars. Tokyo itself is really just a collection of microchip neighbourhoods, with little order to help you find an address. Homes are packed as tight as pieces of sushi in a take-out box. When I once got lost in a small neighborhood, six people -- including a man getting a haircut — rushed out to

The city's bewildering maze of small streets, I suspect, was a major incentive for Japanese companies to perfect the fax machine, Now Tokyoites can quickly send someone a map of how to find their house

Living in such close quarters, one gets along by going along. Human ties are as regimented, synchronized, and precise as the traditional tea ceremony or modern train travel in Japan. I can set my watch to the on-time arrival of a train, just as I set my social status by revealing my age. And I have also learned, from a stern matron who keeps guard on my street, exactly how to set out my garbage in line with everyone

When our next-door neighbour tore down his house to build a new one, he apologized for the noise and dust by simply presenting my wife and I with a gour-met meal of fish. When an office near mine was ripped out with jackhammers, I was presented with flowers.

Our neighbourhood, as everywhere in Japan, is filled with small shops, many selling the same goods. We have two toy stores, two tofu makers, two rice sellers, two butchers ... No one dares allow raw competition to disrupt this quaint feeling of a village. Every night the old man who sells hot sweet potatoes passes by, pulling his cart, singing out for customers. He looks the other way when he passes the Seven Eleven convenience stores.

To fit in, we have paid the obligatory visits to the local Budhhist temple and Shinto shrine, rung the bells and clapped our hands to the gods. This time of year, we join the throngs of party-goers and kimono-clad women who sit under the blooming cherry trees to watch pink petals drift away. The ultimate test of litting in comes at "crush hour."

Shoving one's way on to the last square foot of space in an overcrowded subway train full of commuters takes grace and pressure. Japanese businessmen go at it like they do for market share.

I've studied the technique of Tokyo's dainty "office ladies." The trick is to walk backward through the door into the crowd. That way, you can't see the faces of those you must squash.

But then, as the door slams shut near your nose and everyone settles into his tiny place, you just say: "Pardon my rudeness."

Suzy, who starred for three years in London's West End in the play Children of a Lesser God, went on: "It has become so bad now that whenever I do anything.

I make sure nothing can go wrong.
"Right now we are in the middle of moving offices. I have five year's worth of travel tapes here. I know that if I put them in the removal van, something dreadful will happen.

'And whenever I get on a plane, the first thing I do is check under the seat to make sure the life-jacket is there. I always assume I'm going to need it.

"People laugh at me because I won't go in lifts and I hate the London Underground. I have always been afraid of flying and in my line of work I have to go on a plane every couple of weeks. I can't

"When I fly, I'm a nervous wreck. I have to hold the hand of whoever is sitting next to me. And it doesn't get any easier. The more I travel, the worse it becomes because every time I go to another country, something awful seems to happen.

"I was flying back from Spain a few weeks ago and the plane flew through the only cloud in the sky and was hit by lightning. There were sparks coming out of the engines and for someone like me it was hair-raising.

"I began to wonder if everything I worry about comes true. That is why, when I'm on a plane, I have to tell myself, 'Don't think about engines!'

When Suzy was in a lift in Majorca recently, the cable snapped and the lift fell five floors. She told me: "It's one thing for a lift to get stuck, but a five-floor drop is enough to put you off lifts for life. "I broke my finger in the fall and didn't Suzy's catalogue of disaster seems endless — and a little comic. Last year, in the hope of curing her fear of flying, she sat in on a couple of aircraft disaster simulations. This was so she could see how crews are trained to deal with inflight problems.

Relaxing in her office at the LBC studios, Suzy explained: "The cabin fire was frightening because there was so much smoke. It wasn't a real fire but the strength. I was seasick anyway, and pregnant, and then we hit this storm. It was a 'man the lifeboats' situation.'

Suzy lives in Holland Park, West London, with her 37-year-old boyfriend Steve Crozier, who presents an earlymorning commuter travel information show on LBC. She worked right through her pregnancy, including the day Beniamin was born, when she even had to stand in for Steve who had broken his leg. "I was amazed Ben was even born because I had such a busy pregnancy," she told me. "I put on only 8lb and didn't even look like I was expecting a baby. "I wasn't very popular with the doctors because I did nothing they told me to do, which was to take it easy for nine months. I carried on working and travellhave been thinking I was getting a bit podgy. But some people at work never knew I was pregnant.

When I came back some said to me, Where have you been? When I told them I'd had a baby, they didn't believe me. In the end I had to bring Ben in to prove it?"

Suzy, an elegant and very composed blonde, went on: "I could take off only seven days after the birth because there are a lot of people out there who would love to have my job. If I had been away any longer, there would have been another person in my place like a shot.

"So I hobbled back after a week. Steve just about managed, even with a broken leg, and my mother came down to help. It was all incredibly difficult."

'Visit Malaysia year'

Muslim hospitality welcomes tourists

By Kenneth L. Whiting

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia. (AP): For a country that started taking tourism seriously only three years ago. Malaysia has been a quick study when it comes to learning how to attract foreign visitors.

A million tourists arrived in the first three months of 1990, more than double the same period a year ago. Another two million visitors dropped in from the neighbouring city-state of Singapore.

These may not be a big number compared to world famous vacation spots, but are impressive for a country that almost had to be coaxed into putting out the welcome mat. For a long time there was no political will to develop the industry," said Sabbaruddin Chik, chief of the Ministry of Culture and Tourism.

Malaysia remained aloof for years while its neighbour sought to woo free-spending foreigners.

Comfortably cushioned by an array of resources. Malaysia is developing a manufacturing sector to complement its exports of natural rubber, palm oil, cocoa, pepper, tropical hardwoods, tin, petroleum and natural gas. Recognition that tourism is a major international industry finally prompted the government to create a separate Ministry of Tourism and Chauvinists immediately demanded that the names be reversed to give culture precedence over tourism, which to them had overtones of selling the country to foreigners, something that might be tolerated but not particularly liked.

One speaker told a forum in January that the "Visit Malaysia Year" campaign is "making a meckery of Malaysian society" for which the people are not socially prepared.

thing is ready before you promote tourism, we will never, ever be ready." Sabbaruddin said.

While the culture has no tradition of tourism, it does put a premium on hospitality - both social customs and Islamic law enjoin Malaysians to treat guests better than themselves. There are limits,

There are unspoiled jungles, spectacular coral reefs, many unpopulated beaches and hill resorts perched above the tropical heart.

Sightseers can watch rubber trees being tapped, monkeys helping harvest coconuts from tall palms and, in Borneo, spend the night as guests in the longhouses of former headhunters.

The food is tasty, travel is expensive and mostly trouble-free, and a wide variety of hotels offer relatively good value. They range from Hiltons and Holiday Inns to the Club Med and more basic beachside bungalows.

The official goal of "Visit Malaysia Year" is to attract more than 4.2 million tourists and reap earnings of 2.5 billion ringgit ($926 million) compared to 3.9 million people and two billion ringgit ($641 million)

Sea orphans 'mum' gets the seal of approval

By Claire Lockhart

THE tragedy of the virus that made her headline news is now, hopefully, over for good... but seals are still a 20-hours-a-day. seven-days-a-week job for Brenda Giles.

The woman who was recently awarded the British Empire Medal for her wildlife work looks back on that time with great sadness for the animals that suffered and died, and also because she and husband Alan had warned of the dangers in advance. At her back garden sanctuary, Brenda,

52, said: "We had noticed a difference in the seals about four years before the virus. in the early years of our work, perhaps 90 per cent of the babies became separated from their mothers and they needed to be hand reared. And 10 per cent would be sick or injured. "But over the years that has now changed so that 90 per cent are not only separated from mother but also have sickness. And we feel this is mainly to do with pollution.

"But no-one would listen because we have no veterinary or scientific qualifications, so we are not classed as official and officialdom likes to rub shoulders with officialdom!"

There has been no sign of the virus since the end of 1988 but Brenda can't forget that it cost the lives of about 30 seals brought to her at the time.

Yel she has saved more than 250 seals. stranded by storms in The Wash and returned them to the sea since transforming the garden of her home in Kings Lynn, Norfolk, into a seal rescue sanctuary 15 years ago. She runs it entirely on voluntary don-

She said: "When the seals first arrive some of them only hours old and still with cord hanging — they do need a mother baby relationship.

Some have been lying on the marsh for days and are so weak and have lost the will to survive, so we need to give them something to cling on. We have to rekindle the will to survive. They need a mother."

"But just like human children as they become more independent, they grow away from me. So by the time they go back to sea, they're like teenagers and don't

For 15 years, Brenda Giles has rescued the stranded creatures and nursed them back to health, battling the killer virus that claimed so many. Now she has a medal to show for it - but her 'seven day job' hasn't changed

Brenda Giles: wildlife work

When the time comes to release the creatures back into the sea, Brenda admits to fixed feelings. "Since the virus, there haven't been so many seals. But before the virus I've had as many as 30 babies to hand rear. And I used to spend 20 hours a day pushing sprats down little throats while my husband did the cleaning. When you work 20 hours a day for months on end. you get tired and exhausted. You can get want to be tied to mum's apron strings anymore.

used to it and you can keep it up while you have to, but you do get very tired." "So when they go back to the sea. you're thankful and relieved and sorry to see them to go. On the other hand, you're extremely babies. And they were dying."

"And no-one could give us any advice as to what to do to help them because we were the first in the country to have it. So we had to go through that experience and it was Yet the job is not without it's humorous moments, usually when a seal tries to escape. Brenda remembers: "We had a grey seal called Beautiful and she was going to be released the next day. And about half past four in the morning there was a loud banging on the door. It was a roliceman. "He'd just found a seal and wondered if it could be one of ours. I just went with him in my nightdress, down the garden and out into the main road."

"And Beautiful was in the car park of the pub across the road. We think she was having a celebratory drink because she knew she was going to be released."

We managed to coax her into the middle of the road and then she wouldn't come. And we saw the lights of a car coming down the road. It was a very frosty morning in February and the policeman stepped out into the road, waved his torch and the car stopped."
"You should have seen the look on the face of the driver, seeing a woman standing in the middle of this frosty road just in a nightdress with a seal!" Brenda tries to treat every seal the same but mevitably there are those that become special. "I do try to make each one feel it's the only one that matters and I'm it's mum and no-one else's." "But they're like children. You get one that's extrovert and independent, and another that's a slow developer and needs coaxing a bit." Some need a lot of nursing and you can't help getting a little more attached to those ones. She had one premature baby seal that weighed only 10lbs instead of the usual 22lbs. "He was still in his white coat which the common seal sheds inside it's a mother a few days before birth," "He looked like a dandilion - so tiny and all head. Of course, I got very attached to him and I thought I would have to take him to the sea several times before he of my system. I was nursing those little realised that's where he belonged."

Juventus win Uefa Cup

Zoff holds aloft the Uefa Cup. (Reuter wirephoto)

AVELLINO, Italy, May 18, (Reuter): Juventus held fellow-Italians Fiorentina to a 0-0 draw in the second leg of the Uefa Cup soccer final on Wednesday to win 3-1 on aggregate despite being reduced to 10 men in a very physical match. Juventus, who also won the Italian Cup this season after five years without a trophy, faced a fierce second half onslaught from their compatriots after Pasquale Bruno, who was booked in the first half, was sent off in the 58th minute.

Fiorentina, forced to play their home leg in the town of Avellino near Naples because of crowd trouble in the semilinal, could find no way to unlock the

Juventus, who won the Uefa

Cup in 1977 but whose last trophy was the European Cup in 1985, had several scoring chances in the first half with star striker Salvatore Schillaci shooting narrowly wide twice in the space of four minutes.

Both sides had chances in the opening stages of the match, with Roberto Galia, who scored for Juventus in the first leg, heading just wide from a free kick in the second minute.

A minute later Baggio broke free in the box but shot wide. He had another chance to give Fiorentina the early goal they were desperately looking for in ·he 13th minute.

From Celeste pin's cross, Di Chiara back-heeled to put Bag-gio in space but he shot narrowly wide once more.

In the second half, Tacconi was called into action after eight minutes when he could only parry a long range shot from Kubik.

A minute later Fiorentina appealed for a penalty when Giancarlo Marocchi appeared to shove Renato Buso to the ground but West German referee Aaron Schmidhuber waved the angry players away. Fiorentina also had an appeal

But Juventus held on in determined fashion to earn manager Dino Zoff two trophies in just his second year charge. However, his contract is to end after this match because Juventus made a deal to hire Bologna coach Luigi Maisrebi two years ago.

Juventus' victory gave Italy their second European trophy, following Sampdoria's triumph in the Cup Winners' Cup last week. AC Milan have an opportunity to make it a clean sweep when they contest the European cup next week.

There were bookings for Antonio Dell'oglio, Marco Nappi and Buso of Fiorentina and Sergei Alemikov for Juventus. Nappi was also booked in the Zoff said: "It was great, wonderful and the merit is theirs. They battled even though they were down to 10, one can't want better than that.

"It compensates a lot for my regret at leaving Juventus. Leaving at such a time, that's destiny — it's cruel.'

The Olympic silver medallist started the decade in style by winning the Commonwealth 100 metres title in a wind-assisted 9.93 seconds and anchoring the spring relay team to victory.

Then in March be won the European indoor 60 metres title before returning to his native

Jamaica for 10 weeks.

Christie turned 30 last month and is aware that he does not have many seasons left at the top. Accordingly, he will use the European section of the 1990 Grand Prix circuit, which starts in Sao Paulo, Brazil, this Sunday to stake his claim as the world's top sprinter.

"I'll be racing a lot this season." Christie says. "Because if there are sprinters trying to avoid me, I'll go and find them.

"There are the Americans like Leroy Burrell, Mark Witherspoon and Carl Lewis. Then there's Ray Stewart of Jamaica and Chidi Imoh of Nigeria,

Christie defends his European 100 metres title in Split, Yugoslavia, this year but his most competitive race is likely to come in the prestigious Zurich meeting on August 15.

Lewis, the Olympic champion, will have a low-key season although there is still a possibility he could take part in a special race against Ben Johnson when the Canadian's two-year suspension for doping ends in September.

The American is now the world record holder after Johnson was stripped of the 9.83 second mark he set in the 1987 Rome world championships.

"I plan to compete in only seven to nine meets," Lewis said. One of those is expected to be the Goodwill Games in Seattle in

United capture 7th FA Cup

Martin's goal brings down Palace

Martin holds aloft the FA Cup. (Reuter wirephoto)

LONDON, May 18, (Reuter): Fullback Lee Martin gave Man-chester United their seventh FA Cup victory at Wembley yesterday with the only goal of an often scrappy final replay against underdogs Crystal Palace. It was Martin's first goal of the season and before the game he had been rated 50-1 against scoring.

The England under-21 inter-national's 60th minute strike was a fine effort but no more than United deserved against their

London opponents.
Ironically, local boy Martin cost nothing in a team assembled for £13 million ($20 million). The replay, following Saturday's 3 draw, was the first in the final since 1983 when United beat Brighton 4-0.

United manager Alex Ferguson, knowing the importance of victory after a disappointing League season that easts doubts on his future at Old Trafford. dropped Scotland international goalkeeper Jim Leighton for the replay.

Although not a total surprise, the move was amply rewarded.

Instead of Leighton, who bore the brunt of the blame for some of Palace's goals on Saturday, Ferguson opted for Les Sealey,

Slaven named in Irish Cup squad

DUBLIN, May 18, (Reuter): Middlesbrough and Ireland striker Bernie Slaven has been handed a ticket to the World Cup finals with only two and a half hours international experience.

Slaven, who made his international debut two months ago and has since only come on as a substitute, was one of 22 players in the Republic of Ireland squad named by manager Jack Charlton yesterday.

A late arrival on the soccer scene, Slaven, 29, used to be a gardener in his native Scotland. He has been Middlesbrough's top scorer for the last four years, with an impressive 32 goals this season. Even so the club was nearly relegated to Division Three.

Charlton's announcement also brought good news for Milwall midfielder Gary Waddock, who has been battling against injury. He still wants to check on the fitness of Madilock, 28, has played for treland only Liverpool's Ronnie Whelan, whose broken

Sahel stun Al Kuwait to reach Cup final

KUWAIT Soccer League's Second Divison Club Al Sahel Club sprang the biggest surprise of the Amir's Cup competition by ousting favourites Al Kuwait in a penalty shootout on Wednesday. Both teams ended the two-leg matches by drawing 1-1. An extra time failed to separate the two teams."

In the penalty shootout, Al Sahel came out victorious 4-3. Al Sahel sailed through the first round by overcoming another First Division team Al Nasr in both the matches. The Amir's Cup competition is being played on a two-leg system for the first time in its 29-year history.

Three other teams qualified for the semifinal stage which would start today. Al Arabi, last season's runnerup, qualified after overcoming a tough challenge from Second Division Kheitan.

Embarassed

Al Arabi managed to score one goal only in the first minute of the time added for stoppages and was embarassed when it drew the second match 1-1. They will meet Al Sahel in today's first semifinal

If they display the same game as they did against Kheitan, Al Arabi may simply find themselves out of the Amir's Cup. Al Sahel has proven they are not the underdogs and are ready to spring yet another surprise. The second-leg match will be played on Tuesday.

The other semifinal is promising to be certainly more exciting with two top First Division teams meeting. Kazma, who passed through two difficult challenges by ousting Jahra, the League champions. and Salmiya, will play Oadsiya, Kazma displayed good form in defeating Jahra 1-0 and 2-1 in their matches and in beating Salmiya 2-1 and drawing the second match 1-1.

Holders Qadsiya, however, have regained the form that eluded them during the third round of the League, when they lost 5 of their 7 matches. In their secona rouna maich. Uadsi thrashed Second Division Al Shabab 3-1 and 6-0. The second match was played late Thursday. Qadsiya finished their first half 1-0 and scored five goals in the second after missing at least a similar number of opportunities. Their main striker Muayyad Al Haddad was in top form and scored a hat-trick.

If they maintain this form against Kazma on Sunday and Wednesday, Qadsiya may not find it difficult to sail through to the final and even win the Cup for the second consecutive time.

In another development, Oadsiya's Brazilian coach, Philip Louis yesterday renewed his contract with Qadsiya for another season. It was reported that he and the club overcame some financial obstacles before renewing the contract.

Wilander, 25, announced a break from tennis after a firstround exit from the Indian Wells tournament in California in early March and said he would not return "until I feel like playing again — whether it takes a couple of weeks or months."

His decision was also influenced by the health of his father, who is seriously ill with cancer. Wilander, who is married and based in New York, has been spending a lot of time during the break with his parents in the Swedish town of Vaxjo.

Games doves being shot by hunters

"Many of our homers sent out for training were found severely wounded on arrival in Beijing and many others simply disap-peared." Beijing homing Pigeon Association head Zhou Guangda was quoted as saying.

An investigation found that more than 100 hunters were staking out the birds' route and shoot-ing them out of the sky with small bunting rifles, the newspaper

Sulayem powers his Winston Toyota to victory.

AMMAN: Mohammed Bin Sulayem won the Jordan Inter-national Rally last night in the style which has allowed him to dominate the Fisa Middle East Championship for the last four

After a great surge across the desert plains south of Amman in his Winston Toyota Celica GT-4, the UAE star roared back to the capital to celebrate an emphatic victory by more than four minutes from compatriot Suhail Khalifa.

Saudi Arabia's Mamdouh Khayat, accompanied by Qalar's Abbas Al Mosawi, finished third in a Mitsubishi Pajero.

It was Sulayem's third successive win in Jordan and his fourth overall in a career which has now brought him 18 international triumphs.

More significantly, it extended his lead in this year's championship and served as a powerful warning to Khalifa and his other leading challengers that he has no intention of weakening his grip on the Middle East title. Winning the opening round of the championship in Qatar was the perfect start to the season for me andthis result puts me in a very good position," said Sulayem after accepting the applause with co-driver Ronan Morgan at the Amman Marriott
